ENGLISH IN THE PROFESSIONAL ACTIVITY OF A FUTURE ECONOMIST

«English is the number one tool for employability, it is no longer a demand, but has become a necessity» [1]. This language is used in any area: everyday life, work, study, and so on. Any good specialist must know English at a high enough level to meet modern realities and be competitive in the labor market.

English is fundamental in economic activities, in the field of finance. First of all, it is worth noting that document flow can occur entirely in a foreign language, for example, when interacting with foreign goods or services. Consequently, a specialist must have certain knowledge and skills to understand and analyze the documentation. Knowledge of the English language provides the right to use foreign literature to search for new, interesting information for work. Thus, it will be possible to better understand the economic situation of these countries and the approximate strategy of their actions, given that Belarus is trying to learn from the mistakes of others and economists, of course, would like to prevent their own and draw on the invaluable experience of other countries, because it is the economy that is the engine of progress. A good specialist knows that the requirements of the market and the foreign economic situation are quite unstable, so you need to be able to adapt quickly. «Learning English promotes self-development» [3]. A specialist can attend master classes by foreign specialists, take advanced training courses abroad, and so on. Thanks to this, the employee grows above himself, can apply for cooperation with foreign companies, occupy a higher position due to greater experience and, of course, receive a higher salary.

«Around half of all employers offer a better starting package to applicants with good English language skills, which can also lead to faster progression through job grades and higher salary increases» [2]. I would like to say that many modern enterprises prefer to hire specialists with “double” qualifications, because it will cost several times less. Let's see the difference with an example: why would an employer hire a translator and an economist and pay salaries to both, if you can hire an economist with a high knowledge of English and get by with little expense? Therefore, every specialist should understand that English, like other foreign languages, will play a decisive role when considering you for some good position. From the point of view of economic literature, many terms such as futures, margin, outsider and others come from the English language. It becomes clear that it is literally impossible to separate this language from the economic sphere, because almost all economists in the world, when communicating using economic terminology, certainly use English words, perhaps without even realizing it - so much has English terminology become entrenched in foreign ones.

To summarize, I would like to note that English is needed in the professional activities of every specialist. It opens up new horizons, new knowledge, acquaintances, new opportunities for career growth and can provide a good, happy future.
